

Gender Gaps in Pay Among Teachers in State Funded Schools in England

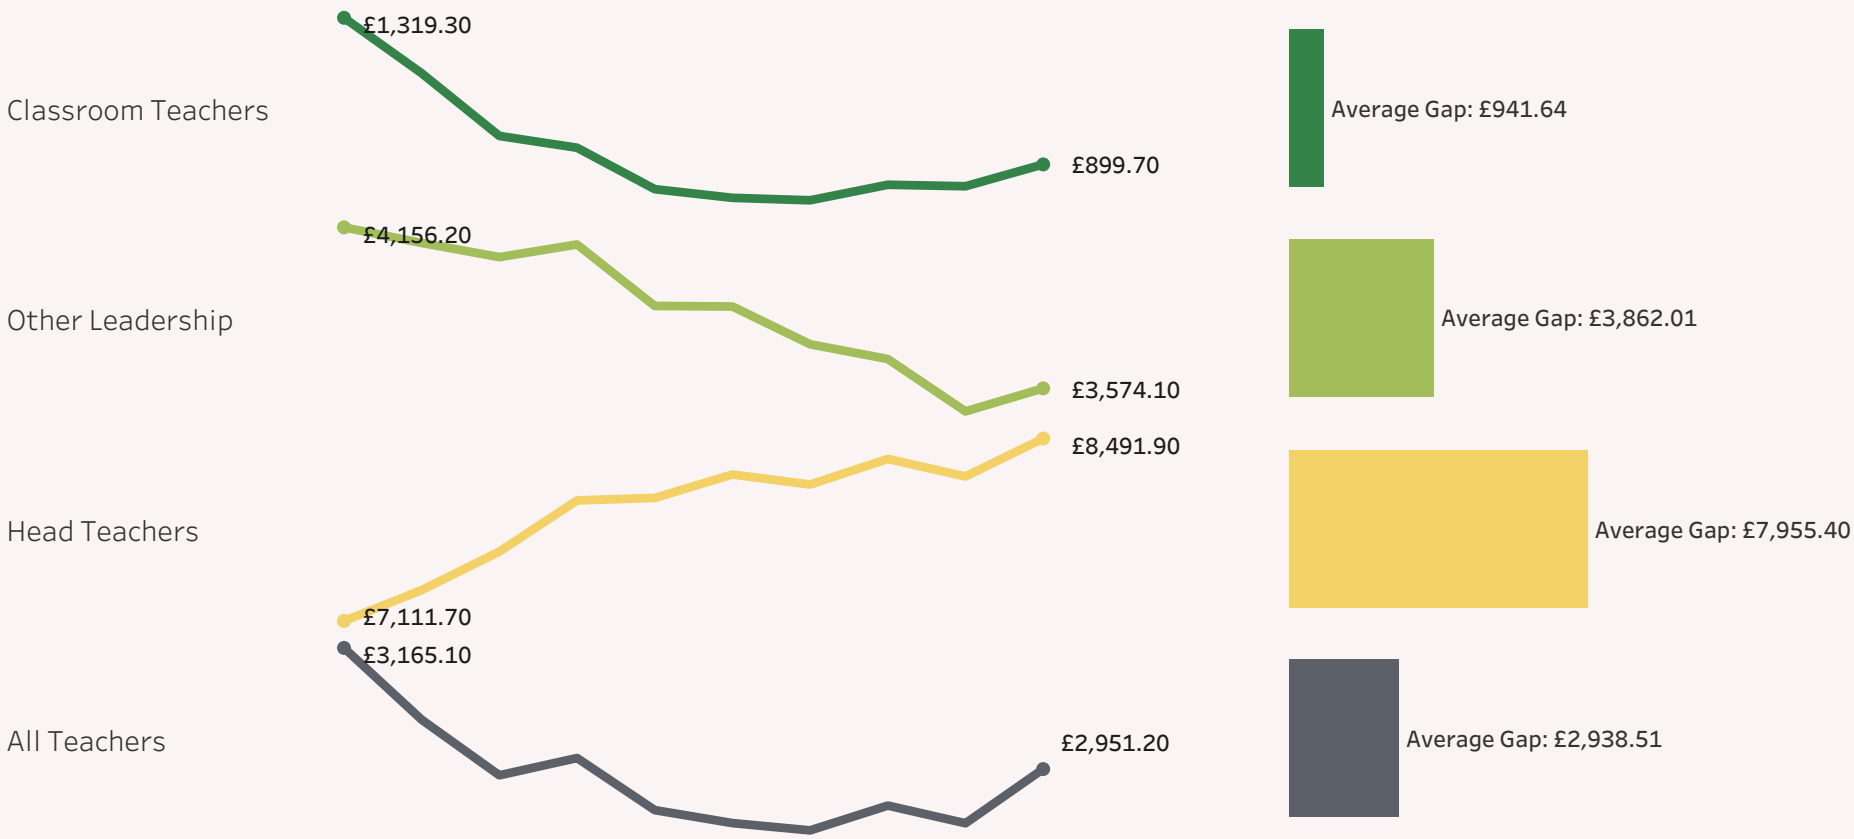

In English state-funded schools, male teachers consistently make more than their female counterparts across all job types and school years. This "gap" is highest for the more lucrative head teacher position, where men have made an average of almost 8,000 pounds (over 12%) more than woman. While pay gaps between men and woman teachers have declined over time in general, these trends have stagnated or gotten worse over the last few school years.

View gaps as

☒ Pounds

☐ Percentage

Pay Gaps By Job Type (Men make X Pounds more than Women - hover over the marks for more info)

Data Sources: School Workforce Census | Gov.uk

Author: Joel Sherman | Twitter: @JMSAnalytics